The Changing Faces of Journalism : Tabloidization ...

When you switch to individual journalists—when the unit of analysis becomes what newswriters do and under which conditions they do it—a messy reality emerges. 1 Although I have argued before to always include the micro, individual-level perspective when theorizing journalism (see Deuze, 2009), it never occurred to me to question the implications of the way journalism is constructed, everyday day again, by journalists, and how this deceptively straightforward point has become so much more ...
